Ottawa received full warning that B.C. would take over public utilities unless federal taxes on them were abolished or all given to the province, Premier Bennett said Wednesday.

In explaining the motive for his takeover of B.C. Electric to the legislature, the premier said he made the move after a final ultimatum failed this summer.

The premier said in effect B.C. was not only being cheated out of its fair share of the power corporation income tax, but its citizens were making a double payment on their light bills.

He based his reasoning on the conclusion that a private utility deserved the same tax exemption as public power companies in other provinces.

By making B.C. Electric a public utility, the province

By making B.C. Electric a public utility, the province will save at least $3,400,000 a year — the approximate amount of corporation tax paid last year by the company.

Agreement with Ottawa was that B.C. would receive approximately half the corporation tax. In 1960-61 this was estimated at $1,700,000, but in fact B.C. only got $260,000.

Unofficial assurances that the provincial government will continue operation of B.C. Electric transit services in Vancouver and Victoria were received Wednesday by Vancouver Mayor Tom Alsbury.

Mayor Alsbury came here immediately after the government took over the company to see Premier Bennett to discuss its effect on taxes and buses in his city. He said he had been told it was a frequent practice of crown corporations to pay grants in lieu of civic taxes and the government intended to maintain the bus system.

The Need of Confidence

HOWEVER WISE MR. FLEM-money supply would not be "irre-ing's policy of devaluing the sponsibly" inflated.

The government must have set cannot succeed except on a basis of public confidence.

"What," asks The Financial "will happen if the Canadian dollar continues to move downward? This clearly, is one of the risks faced by any country that sets its feet on the road of devaluation. It was market confidence that held the Canadian dollar at a premium. It was the market reaction to the budget that dropped the dollar to an immediate discount. What reassurance does Canada offer foreign investors and traders that a little devaluation is all that Canada curdevaluation is all that Canada cur-rently wants?"

Also, what reassurance does the government offer to the Canadian citizen who is asked to save his money and invest it in government or other bonds? When the government must borrow huge amounts this year and is determined to drive interest rates down, the confidence of the ordinary investor is essential to its plans. Lacking confidence in the dollar's future value, the investor will hesitate to invest, the saver will be discouraged from saving.

For all these reasons Mr. Flem-ing should indicate without further delay how far he proposes to go in devaluation and in the expansion of the money supply. His budget speech gave no answer to that ques-tion, stating merely that he sought an appropriate international valua-tion of the dollar and that the

The government must have set a definite mark for its devaluation. It must know whether it wants a 95-cent dollar, in terms of American currency, or a 90-cent dollar. For surely it is not plunging into this experiment without knowing where it wishes to go. Why doesn't Mx. Fleming disclose his real target so that foreign investors, foreign countries trading with Canada and Canadian businessmen may know where they stand, what prospects they face?

It will not be easy, under the best of circumstances, for the government to re-establish confidence in its fiscal policies when they have changed so frequently, when it promised a balanced budget last year, ended with a heavy deficit and then decided on another, far larger, this year.

It will be equally difficult to reestablish confidence in monetary policy which the government repolicy which the government refused to touch until recently, leaving it to the Bank of Canada. Confidence in all directions has been gravely undermined, both at home and abroad.

To revive it must be one of the TT'S NO use, actually, there are so government's first priorities, and to many sounds coming in my wrought-this end it is important that the ron. Spar "type, French-door window. government's objectives should be I can no longer think. government's objectives should be publicly declared as soon as possible in more than broad generalities. Were that construction accepted as a fact, then Mr. Khrushchev might be justified in believing Britain could be split away from the aliance and his pressure play on Berlin might succeed because of disunity among the allies.

Any such assumption appears to be shaken by a poll taken by the London Daily Mail the other day. The newspaper asked its readers: "If America and France insist on standing firm on Berlin, do you consider that we must support

Sixty-eight per cent of the revoted no, and the rest of the an swers were undecided or so qualified they could not be counted one way

This was the response from readers of a widely circulated newspaper, a very fair poll on a vital issue. It helps to remind the world that not all the people in Britain can crowd into Trafalgar Square, and that whatever the hideous consequences of nuclear war might be, there are thoughtful and courageous souls who, abhorring war, still have the fortitude to face its possible outbreak in defence of principles and in a revelation of their sense of responsibility to obligations.

It would be foolish, of course, to think all the 68 per cent who voted to stand by the United States and France in the hypothetical situation posed by the Daily Mail thereby pledged themselves to go to war. Most of them might reasonably have felt that the extraording of their determinant to days was a fleste which doesn't really pression of their determination to stand together in the alliance would forestall the ultimate holocaust that a prospective enemy convinced that he had falled to divide and therefore might not conquer, would retreat from the line which spelled out battle.

There are two rather contrived stories I had hoped to relate. The first, concerning flying by jet to Montreal, would be over the heads of many readers, so I've decided to forego it. However, for those of you who have laughed at Shelly Berman's riotous monologue on whether or not airline pilots and

It is widely believed that had the allies in the years leading up to 1939 let Hitler know without equivocation that they would stand together, Hitler would not have gone to war—a belief that must be on a great act, Natty uniforms, smiling qualified in the light of Hitler's bronzed faces and all that. There is, too, the recent sharp to for those who so far have clung to protectionist methods. Those who believe in Free Trade will see the "Common Market" as a preliminary to that possibility. Being born a Hollander, I have, as far as possible, followed the efforts of the Western European countries to come to a more sensible understanding with their neighbors, I absolutely agree with those who favor England's plan to join the Common Market, which should be another step to a more general common market, which Canada and the United States should join.

I've Become a Foreigner'

"I AM leaving South Africa for the simple reason that I have become a foreigner in the land of my birth." These words, uttered by an Englishspeaking South African before he emi-grated to Australia, express the feelings of scores of other South African emigrants.

Since the proclamation of the Republic on May 31, English-speaking South Africans have been required to undergo a "personality change." Dr. Versoerd has told them to become "true Versoerd has told them to become "true South Africans." Although they number 1,250,000 in a total white population of three million, English-speaking South Africans know that their traditions count for nothing in the Republic. The painstaking removal of royal emblems from public buildings by government hammer-and-chisel crews is markety the culmination of 13 years of ernment hammer-and-chisel crews is merely the culmination of 13 years of "tradition-dishonoring"; a political pro-cess designed to eradicate "English" traditions and feplace them with Afri-kaner republican traditions.

Loyal Republican

Rapidly, Dr. Verwoerd is creating a norm for a "loyal republican"; a citizen who cherishes, or at least respects, the republican sentiments of the Afrikaner republican sentiments of the Afrikaner section, and who supports the race policies of the Nationalist Government.

The transformation, within a year, of Radio South Africa from an impartial corporation into an openly propagandist service, proclaiming racist policies and laying down standards of patriotism, illustrates vividly the change that has come over the country.

It is from this atmosphere, and from

It is from this atmosphere, and from the threat of a clash between Afrikaner and African nationalism, that Englishby SID BARRON speaking South Africans have been emigrating by the score. There is no immediate panic. Superficially, everything is reasonably quiet and orderly. But every week some of South Africa's most valuable clitzens board ships and classes and leave for Britain, Australia.

To shorten a lengthy story. Mt. Baker never looked more majestic. You'll have to take my word, I have no witnesses. Everyone was looking out the left-hand windows at an assortment of lesser peaks.

I was glad the officer made no effort to correct himself. As a matter of wide falling.

I was glad the officer made no effort to correct himself. As a matter of pride only the small errors are straightened out in commercial flying. Tiny slips of the tongue such as:

"Flying beneath us now you will see the Columbia River . . . beg pardon, flowing beg pardon, I could go on, even to mention the hasty conferences in hushed whispers before the loud-speaker announcements, but I'm not a critical individual . . and we did land at Ottawa, excuse me, Montreal, safe and sound, on time and sur-

Attogether they number only some thousands. They are the intellectual, professional and business elite though. Some are not even embittered. They simply shrug their shoulders and deciare that have lost either their business. they have lost faith in South Africa's

On the whole, however, there has been a hardening of attitudes. The conquered English speaking section is hostile towards the Afrikaner faction. The Afrikaners are violently hostile towards the liberals who "undermine" white supremacy. The Africans sullenly licking their wounds after two disastrous clashes with the government, are looking for an opening through which to re-open the struggle for political rights.

An amazing change has come over

An amazing change has come over the one-and-a-half million Coloreds (of the one-and-a-half million Coloreds tof mixed race descent) who live mainly in the Cape Province. Historically a politically apathetic community, anxious to be regarded as an appendage of the white population, it has now swung into revolt against apartheid almost overnight. Dr. Verweerd's refusal to make even minor concessions to the Coloreds has forced their leaders into making unprecedented demands for equal rights.

Political activity is at a low level.

Political activity is at a low level. Dr. Verwoerd has called for a general election in October to secure a new five-year term of office before the economic situation deteriorates further, and the white parliamentary opposition is recon-ciled to losing even more ground in this election.

Political Exclusion

The 12 million non-whites will take no part in the election. With the exception of about 25,000 registered Colored voters, the non-whites are excluded from all white elections. They are forced to confine themselves to extra-parliamentary activity, but they are so hemmed in by laws that there are virtually no forms of political action upon which they can embark legally.

There are thus three political layers in South Africa today, the bottom layer.

There are thus three political layers in South Africa today: the bottom layer of the non-white masses, silent and sullen; the middle layer of opposition whites, either apathetic about their future or worried to distraction; and the top layer of ruling Afrikaners, rugged and impervious to the hostility of the world.

Meanwhile, the tourists come and

This was based on false information received in Victoria and had to do with glassed in promenade decks, all air conditioned and hotel-like far removed from what sea travel should be. I'm pleased to report now that there are still plenty of open promenade decks, and in rough weather such as we experienced North and East of Newfoundland one can feel the salty sting of flying apray when leaning quite far out over the top rail.

However, I'm going to have to give this well-established company rather poor marks on such things as pitch and toss and roll. Stabilizers, it appears, are all the rage now. Sticking out on each side of the ship's bottom they countered the victous might of the sea and produce a dull, sickeningly level passage. Oldtimers tend to harken back to the "good old days" of 20, 30 and 40 years ago and to remark that the current generation doesn't know what it is miss-

Mention the five-cent cigar, the 50c T-bone dinner, the $10 all-wool suit to today's youth and the only response you are likely to evoke is a casual, "really?"

You may notice, if you play golf, that another specimen of the bustle days is becoming increasingly extinct . . . the human golf caddy.

Some of today's tee toddlers may grow up without knowing that at one time the respectable golfer would no more think of playing a round without a caddy than he would without his knicker-

The manual golf-cart was the first sign of automation. It cost more to buy outright but steady playing amortized the purchase in short order. Besides it never snickered, talked back or hiccupped at the wrong moment. Then came the electric caddy, a sort of miniature open-air jeep. These are not as common as houseflies yet. But the price will fall just about the time the office-boys' union wins a wage demand allowing its members A throwback to the push-button caddy era and cer-tainly one of the last of his species is William "Tich"

TICH WALSH

You may have seen Den-toting clubs on city courses the last 40 years. Or you may not. At five feet, one-quarter inch he looks like he is standing in a hole.

Eighty-four birthdays have left him with a skin infield where his hair used to be but his sparkling blue eyes belie the years. His memory is becoming as short as he is, but when he speaks the phrases come fast and crisply.

Ever Heard of An Older Caddy?

was faring in the space age. "Been laid up a few weeks with a pesky knee," he said.

"First time I've ever been off."

"Rheumatism? No, just a touch of arthritis. I'm fine to carry Bob Mayhew's clubs, He'll play only nine holes. I might get five (dollars) out of it." Where he did get the nickname "Tich"?

"Way back when I first caddled at Victoria Golf Club."
he said. "We had an old Scottish caddymaster who gave us all nicknames. He said I reminded him of a little Scottish comedian named Little Tich. So Tich it was. I've never been called anything else.

He reached for his wallet, pulled out a battered bronze tag which read: "Victoria Golf Club: Caddy No. 1."

"Here," he said: "I guess this proves that I am the oldest caddy around here. I'll be 85 in September, You ever heard of any older caddies? I haven't. Not 'ere, not in the United States, not anywhere."

He's not particularly happy about caddy-carts. Looks upon them as a menace to his bread-and-butter, "Course caddying isn't the same nowadays as it used to be. I can remember when golfers carried six clubs in their bag. Now they carry 16 or more."

their bag. Now they carry 16 or more."

He carried golf bags ("the proper way is on the back—
not slung over the shoulder—you distribute the weight better") until two years ago. Then he succumbed to the pull-type carts. He's not too keen about electric carts.

"They say nobody's supposed to use them unless they've had a heart attack," he said. "But I don't believe it. I've reen lots of healthy looking kids driving 'em.'

He'll Take the Ladies - Anytime

Along the way he's had his own golfing thrills ... caddying for the Duke of Windsor (then Prince of Wales) and Bing Croshy. He'll show you proudly the ball he made a hole mone with at Cedar Hill.

He also has the scorecard showing the day he carded a 79 at the same course. "Beat my age that day," he says. "I was 82. Wonder how many 82-year-olds can do that?". Fame of sorts came his way a few years ago. His youngest daughter, Kate suggested him as a candidate for the TV show "What's My Line?" Nobody guessed he wasn't a misplaced jockey and he came away with $50 and all his expenses.

Down through the years he has caddied for both sexes. Any preference?
"Definitely," he said. "Men are tough to caddy for Definitely, he said. "Men are tough to caddy for. Women aren't. You have to study your male golfer, see if he wants advice before you give it. Even then if he flubs you can never be sure he won't blame the caddy.

"Women aren't like that. They'll take the club you give them. And they'll take advice. If they hit a bad shot they don't blame you. I'll take them anytime."

A drip-catcher looks somewhat like an over-sized doughnut squashed flat, even more like a huge pan lid with a hole in the middle. Actually, it is a little difficult to describe at all.

But what it can de! Place this tin "tray" over pan when you are frying meat and onions for a casserole. You can drop more ingredients through the centre four-inch-wide opening and keep stirring without lifting the lid. No spattering of fat in your eyes. Or place the tray under a pie in the over-the wide flanges will catch any drips. Again, it can be used for serving a ring salad mold.

They intend making their home in Brunswick, Germany, where Mr. Goetz will join them in October. Mr. Goetz is presently in Austria where he has just completed his doctorate in economics. Mrs. Goetz and Jane were honored at a recent party given by Mrs. Goetz's fellow workers in the Parliament Buildings in the Mowat Street home of Mrs. G. A. Cedric Jones. The hostess was assisted by Miss Patricia Hollings. Guests also included Mrs. Charles Whyte, Mrs. Margaret Morrison, Mrs. Margaret Messenger and the Misses Sylvia Aldridge, Evelyn Goldsmith, Wynne Robbie, Margaret Dickson and Nina Rowell.

OTTAWA (CP) — Canada's new left-wing political group today chose the name New Democratic Party.

A poll of delegates announced shortly before the decision was taken showed that 784 favored New Democratic Party and 743 New Party as the name of the overanization.

The result was based on a preferential ballot after the first straw vote showed New Party as the favorite but with a minority of the total vote.

Electric, and of the Wenner-Gren scheme for power development of the Peace River.

This action was B.C.'s opening move in an all-out campaign aimed at wholesale export of the province's enormous hydro-electric potential.

Only one member of the federal cabinet has expressed firm opposition to power export. External Affairs Minister Howard Green is on public record on the subject.

Justice Minister E. Davie Fulton, for example, has confined his opposition to the hongiterm sale of Columbia River downstream benefit power—the power that would be returned to B.C. in return for storage on the Canadian reaches of the Columbia.

On the broader subject of power export, Mr. Fulton has not committed himself.

It was learned today that the cabinet has never discussed the issue to the point of arriving at a decision.

Instead, the whole question was handed over to the National Energy Board.

In explaining the motive for his takeover of B.C. Electric to the legislature, the premier said he made the move after a final ultimatum failed this summer.

The premier said in effect B.C. was not only being cheated out of its fair share of the power corporation income tax, but its citizens were making a double payment on their light bills.

companies in other provinces.

By making B.C. Electric a public utility, the province will save at least $3,400,000 a year—the approximate amount of corporation tax paid last year by the company. It will also gain $7,300,000 more in other taxes paid by the company—school taxes, municipal property taxes, transit franchise fees to Victoria and Vancouver.

Agreement with Ottawa was that B.C. would receive approximately half the corporation tax. In 1960-61 this was estimated at $1,700,000, but in fact B.C. only got
